Green Mars

Compared to Red Mars, Green Mars felt like a more fully developed story with more complicated characters. That said, many of the characters are still completely unlikeable and the plot device of "the treatment" is a little overdone (but necessary both to give a cause for civilization collapse on Earth and the recycling of "the 100" on Mars).

Green Mars (Mars Trilogy): Robinson, Kim Stanley ...

Green Mars takes place some time after Red Mars and describes the breakdown in relationships between the Earth and the Martian colonizers. Mars is slowly becoming green as Sax's terraforming is starting to bear fruit, but the Earth wishes to exercise increased control over their colony and this creates an explosive situation.

Dream of a Green Mars Achievement in Surviving Mars

Where Red Mars ended with the violent destruction of human cities and Martian landscape, Green Mars ends with only the city of Burroughs being destroyed. Red Mars featured murder and war. The most violent incidents in this book - Maya Toitovna's killing of Phyllis Boyle, Sax Russell's rescue from the prison city of Kasei Vallis and its eventual destruction - are given very little space in a 535 page book.
